

2022 Pac-12 Football Championship Game Fans Can Offset Their Own Carbon Footprint Thanks to Partnership with United Green Energy, Pacific Seafood

Pac-12 is offsetting its carbon use for the 2022 title game through the partnership with reforestation, renewable projects

SAN FRANCISCO (Nov. 29) – The Pac-12 Conference and its partners in carbon offsets, United Green Energy (UGE) and Pacific Seafood, invite fan participation in their reduction of the carbon produced by the 2022 Pac-12 Football Championship Game, presented by 76[®], to be held Friday, Dec. 2 at Allegiant Stadium in Las Vegas. With the support of Pacific Seafood, the Official Meat and Seafood Provider of the Pac-12, the 2022 football championship game will be the first-ever carbon offset Power 5 conference title game. Fans will be able to log onto www.pac12teamgreen.com to offset their own carbon footprint along with their favorite Pac-12 team in the title game.

Along with fan participation, the partners announced the lead project contributing to the offsets of the title game. These offsets will come from Bigcoast Forest, supporting its coastal wetlands reforestation efforts. Bigcoast Forest climate initiatives support a detailed forest management plan in the critical coastal area of the Pacific Northwest, including British Columbia. Other carbon offsets support renewable energy projects across the country.

“Through this marquee sporting event, the Pac-12 is driving change in tangible and meaningful ways,” said Pac-12 Deputy Commissioner and COO Jamie Zaninovich. “We can’t wait for fans to participate by neutralizing their own carbon footprint in real time along with our conference title game, the first ever carbon-offset event of its kind among the Power 5. This continues the dedicated sustainability efforts taking place across the Conference and Pac-12 Team Green.”

Carbon footprint aspects to be offset for the Pac-12’s football title game include, but are not limited to, the following for both competing universities & traveling staff, event operations staff and other Pac-12 representatives in attendance:

- Round-trip flights & road transportation
- Allegiant Stadium facility operations
- Practices for both teams in lead up to Championship Game
- Ancillary events related to the Football Championship Game including Kickoff Party, VIP Tailgate, School Assemblies and more
- Pac-12 event load in and out

"Pacific Seafood is proud to partner with the Pac-12 and United Green Energy to offset carbon emissions from the 2022 Pac-12 Football Championship Game," said Bill Hueffner, Vice President of Marketing for Pacific Seafood. "At Pacific Seafood we believe it is our responsibility to serve our oceans through a continuous commitment to sustainable fishing practices that ensure healthy stocks for generations to come. We know that taking care of our earth is critical for the health of our oceans so we are dedicated to reducing, reusing, and recycling in every area we can to conserve our precious resources; including nearly 100 percent whole fish utilization." "Our partnership with the Pac-12 to offset carbon emissions generated by their Championship Game sets an important precedent for the sustainability of events like this. Utilizing carbon offsets from verified projects is a key element in the battle against climate change, and Bigcoast Forest is a reputable, impactful program that we're proud to support with this partnership," said Tom Williams, Executive Chairman of UGE. "Getting fans involved through the Pac-12 Team Green initiative is also a special event in and of itself, and we hope that many will participate by offsetting their own carbon footprint."

Allegiant Stadium, the home of the 2022 Pac-12 Football Champ Game, is committed to developing sustainable policies and practices while being powered by local renewable energy sources. The Pac-12's efforts, along with the assistance of Pacific Seafood, United Green Energy and Allegiant Stadium, further the impact of this initiative.
